Haitian Mobilities in Brazil: Opportunities and Politics

Tuesday, February 4, 2020
12:15 to 1:15 p.m.
Oldenburg Dining Hall, south side

Handerson Joseph
Professor
University Federal of Amapa/Brazil

In the last decade, Brazil has become a unique space in the configurations of Haitian international mobility, constituting itself as a place of opportunities for a good part of the Haitian population. How are Haitian mobility practices and networks constituted in/for Brazil? Who are the Haitians now making their lives and where are they in the country? What are the policies and ways of governing this mobility?

Handerson Joseph holds a Ph.D. in Social Anthropology and is currently a Professor at the Federal University of Amapá (UNIFAP)/Brazil, Social Sciences and Permanent Professor and Coordinator of the Postgraduate Program in Border Studies. He is also a Permanent Professor of the Master’s Program in Social Anthropology at the State University of Haiti (UEH) and a Collaborating Professor of the Master 2 Program in Societies and Interculturalities of the University Guyane (French Guiana). He is Founder and Coordinator of the Migrant and Refugee Support Program (PAMER).

fmi on other Spring 2020 OLC events, visit pomona.edu/oldenburg and click on “Oldenborg Luncheon Colloquium (OLC),” Dining hall access does require a meal purchase; 5C students swipe in and 7C faculty/staff sign in; community members may attend at Oldenborg’s discretion and incur a charge.